The Bishop Strachan School (BSS), named after Anglican Bishop John Strachan, the first bishop of Toronto, is the oldest and one of the most prestigious day and boarding schools for girls in Toronto, Canada. From its beginning, the school educated young women to become accomplished in academics, offering university entrance subjects such as Latin even before most universities admitted women.

The school currently has around 850 day and boarding students from all around Canada and the world. Like many other private schools throughout the Commonwealth, BSS's traditions are based on similar schools in Britain. With over 140 years of experience helping young women become leaders, BSS is among the premier girls' schools in North America.

Although BSS is located in a safe, leafy, residential neighborhood, it's just minutes from downtown Toronto. The school is a short walk from the nearby subway stations of St Clair or St Clair west. This yellow line takes you directly to the city center in just a few minutes, giving plenty of opportunity to truly discover all Toronto has to offer.
